

Today in 2010 unfortunately everyone has decided to focus on the reality celebrity garbage out there instead of focusing on the game and real skills a player has. It seems like everything that matters today is the Sports Players personal life.

Seeing sports players in underwear commercials are a lot more interesting to many than the game itself(especially for the woman), another example is Lamar - a Lakers player people started to focus on him after he married a reality "star" named Kloe and it seems that everyone cares more about how many babies, when and where this couple is going to have and not Lamars real skills but I guess you can sometimes thank the Reality Garbage Life that throw a spotlight in your life, although I complain I never heard of Lamar before he married Kloe.
